PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO

THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS

FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT

The petitioners respectfully pray that a Writ of Certiorari issue to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals entered on January 3, 1975.

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit is reported at 508 F.2d 1023 (2d Cir. 1975) and is set forth in the Appendix, infra, p. 1a. The opinion of the District Court for the Southern District of New York is reported at 376 F.Supp. 1095 (S.D.N.Y. 1974) and is set forth in the Appendix, infra., p. 17a.

JURISDICTION

The opinion and judgment of the Court of Appeals were entered on January 3, 1975. The jurisdiction of this Court to review the judgment below is conferred by 28 U.S.C. §1254(1).

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether the Respondents policy routinely denying extended voluntary departure to Western Hemisphere close relatives of resident aliens which requires the breaking up of their families for extended periods of time, could be justified by the equal protection principles of the Fifth Amendment in view of the fact that the close relatives of citizens in exactly the same position could remain together.

2. Whether the operating instructions which implemented Respondents' discriminatory policy are void as violative of the rule-making procedures of the Administrative Procedure Act?

STATUTORY PROVISION INVOLVED

5 U.S.C. Section 553(b) and (c):

> (b) General notice of proposed rule making shall be published in the Federal Register, unless persons subject thereto are named and either personally served or otherwise have actual notice thereof in accordance with law. The notice shall include -
> (1) a statement of the time, place, and nature of public rule making proceedings;
> (2) reference to the legal authority under which the rule is proposed; and
> (3) either the terms or substance of the proposed rule or a description of the subjects and issues involved.
> Except when notice or hearing is required by statute, this subsection does not apply -
> (A) to interpretative rules, general statements of policy, or rules of agency organization, procedure, or practice; or

(B) when the agency for good cause finds (and incorporates the finding and a brief statement of reasons therefor in the rules issued) that notice and public procedure thereon are impracticable, unnecessary, or contrary to the public interest.

(c) After notice required by this section, the agency shall give interested persons an opportunity to participate in the rule making through submission of written data, views, or arguments with or without opportunity for oral presentation. After consideration of the relevant matter presented, the agency shall incorporate in the rules adopted a concise general statement of their basis and purpose. When rules are required by statute to be made on the record after opportunity for an agency hearing, sections 556 and 557 of this title apply instead of this subsection.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Petitioners Rodolphe Noel and Antoine Petit are aliens and citizens of Haiti. Petitioners Emiris Noel and Yanick Petit are their lawful, permanent resident alien spouses. Rodolphe Noel entered this country on May 24, 1969, overstayed and was ordered deported on July 12, 1973. Pursuant to 8 U.S.C. §1254, he requested an extension of time to depart for an indefinite period until he obtained an immigrant visa because of his marriage on April 13, 1973 to petitioner Emiris Noel.

Similarly, Petitioner Noel Petit was admitted here on August 4, 1970, overstayed and was ordered deported on August 6, 1973. He also requested extended voluntary departure because of his marriage on June 26, 1973 to Petitioner Yanick Petit.

Such extensions were and are routinely granted all deportable aliens married to American citizens and thereafter applying for immigrant visas. The policy of the Immigration and Naturalization Service (hereafter INS) in the New York district between 1968 and June, 1972 was to permit Western Hemisphere aliens,[1] such as Noel and Petit, who were in this country and married to permanent resident aliens, to remain in this country on extended voluntary departure until an immigrant visa became available. However, on July 17, 1972 the INS issued new "operating instructions" which were released on July 17, 1972 and which were implemented on August 1, 1972. These operating instructions which were never published in the Federal Register and for which no lawful rule-making procedure was implemented, created a wholly new policy for treatment of requests for stay of deportation by intending Western Hemisphere immigrants. Those married to American citizens continue routinely to enjoy stays of deportation as they did under previous INS policy. Those married to lawful resident aliens are routinely denied stays of deportation pending visa issuance, except in cases of the most extreme hardship.

After objection by Congressman Rodino (see Appendix, infra, p. 29a) INS issued new instructions on April 10, 1973 providing that extended voluntary departure would be granted to close relatives of permanent resident aliens who were present in the United States and who had the requisite family status on or before April 10, 1973. If they occurred afterwards (as in the case of both the Noels and the Petits) departure would not be deferred.

This action was commenced on August 24, 1973 by the filing of a complaint and an order to show cause to bring on a motion for a preliminary injunction against the INS policy. On February 8, 1974, the district court denied the motion for a preliminary injunction. On appeal, the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit affirmed the denial of the motion on the ground that Western Hemisphere aliens were coming to the United States in large numbers and adversely affecting the domestic labor market. Thus the policy bore "a rational and substantial relationship to the avowed purpose of Congress to protect the American economy." It further held that the operating instructions were "general statements of policy" and thus exempt from the rulemaking procedures of the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. §553(b) and (c).

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

1. The INS Policy under Review Violates the Equal Protection Principles of the Fifth Amendment.

This case involves an attack upon a harsh and discriminatory Immigration and Naturalization Service Policy that requires the families of lawful resident aliens to be split up for extended periods of time while the families of American citizens in exactly the same position can remain together, thus violating basic equal protection principles. The policy is sanctioned by no Act of Congress, in fact the House of Representatives has acted to overrule the policy.[2/] It directly conflicts with a

2/ H.R. 981 (93d Cong. 1st Sess.) was passed by the House on September 26, 1973 by a vote of 336 to 30. 119 Cong. Rec. H.8346 (daily ed. Sept. 26, 1973). The bill would grant preferences in the grant of immigrant visas to all immediate family members of both citizens and lawful resident aliens. This would eliminate the long wait for immigrant visas by Western Hemisphere family members described in the text. This purpose was outlined by Congressman Frey just before the House voted on the bill: "H.R. 981 will give top priority to reuniting families by applying the Eastern Hemisphere preference system to Western Hemisphere immigrants." Ibid. H.8346.

prime policy of the Immigration laws and the essential purpose of the INS rules implementing these laws. As Representative Peter W. Rodino, Jr. (then Chairman of the House Judiciary Subcommittee on Immigration and Nationality) has written in an attempt to have the former INS Commissioner Raymond F. Farrell repeal the policy at issue in this case:

> "I feel certain that you will agree that this course of action [revoking the policy] will alleviate much hardship and that the interest of humanity will be better served. The uniting of families has been paramount in all consideration of legislation in the field of immigration." Letter of Peter J. Rodino, Jr. to Raymond F. Farrell, dated March 28, 1973, Exhibit C to Affidavit of Austin T. Fragomen, Jr., in Support of Motion for a Preliminary Injunction, attached herein at 29a.

Thus, this case presents to this Court the question of how far the federal government, through administrative action, may burden resident aliens with a harsh and discriminatory policy that does not apply to citizens, that does not have any basis in law and that serves no rational governmental purpose. In this respect it presents an issue similar to the one before this Court in Takahashi v. Fish & Game Comm'n, 334 U.S. 410 (1948), Graham v. Richardson, 403 U.S. 365 (1971), Sugarman v. Dougall, 413 U.S. 634 (1973) and In re Griffiths, 413 U.S. 717 (1973). In each of those cases, this Court held that the states could not restrict resident aliens from employment opportunities, welfare benefits, civil service appointment or bar admission that were available to citizens.

More recently this Court has examined how far the federal government may infringe the rights of aliens pursuant to Congressional enactment. Mow Sun Wong v. Hampton, 500 F.2d 1031 (9th Cir. 1974), cert. granted, 417 U.S. 944 (1974), restored to the calendar for reargument, 43 U.S.L.W. 3474 (March 3, 1975); Diaz v. Weinberger, 361 F.Supp. 1 (S.D. Fla. 1973) prob. juris. noted 416 U.S. 980 (1974), restored to the calendar for reargument, 43 U.S.L.W. 3474 (March 3, 1975). See also Ramos v. United States Civil Service Comm'n, 376 F.Supp. 361 (D.P.R. 1974).

The cases cited above stand for the proposition that neither the state nor the federal government may treat citizens and lawful resident aliens differently with respect to certain rights or benefits unless a clear legitimate governmental purpose requires a contrary result.

Petitioners here do not challenge the basic division made in the immigration laws between citizens and aliens, nor the elaborate procedures governing both immigration and naturalization. Obviously, distinctions based upon citizenship lie at the heart of the immigration act. But once a person has fulfilled the requirements of the law and acquired resident status, awaiting only the passage of time before he becomes a citizen, the federal government may not impose irrational burdens upon him by administrative action.

It seems incontrovertible that the INS policy at issue violates the equal protection principles of the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment in at least three different ways:

First, the policy violates this Court's explicit holding that "classifications based on alienage are 'subject to close judicial scrutiny'." Sugarman v. Dougall, 413 U.S. 634, 642 (1973).

Secondly, the policy attacks the alien relatives and the resident alien spouses fundamental right to remain in this country and to remain united with their family members. See Loving v. Virginia, 388 U.S. 1, 12 (1967); Stanley v. Illinois, 405 U.S. 645, 651 (1972).

Thirdly, the policy is a classic example of a weak, discrete and insular minority being severely punished by administrative action while a larger group in precisely the same situation, but possessed of stronger political power, is left alone.

This Court in Sugarman indicated that discrete and insular minorities, such as aliens, can secure the assistance of federal courts applying equal protection principles, quoting from United States v. Carolene Products Co., 304 U.S. 144, 152-153, n. 4 (1938). A fortiori, an administrative practice not sanctioned by any statute that restricts the rights of such minorities must be carefully examined.

The INS and the court below sought to justify the policy on the ground that it was in furtherance of a Congressional purpose and constituted an effort to protect the American labor market from competition by the close relatives of resident aliens. Neither justification can be supported.

The legislative history of the 1965 amendments to the Immigration and Nationality Act (Senate Report No. 748, 89th Cong. 1st Sess., Sept. 15, 1965. U.S. Code Congr. & Admin. News, 3328-3370).shows Congress' intent to grant preferential admission to aliens based on family relationships with either U.S. citizens or permanent resident aliens. In fact, the concepts of close relatives of citizens and close relatives of permanent residents are always linked together in a single thought:

> In place of the National Origins System, the Bill establishes a new system of selection designed to be fair, rational, humane, and in the national interest. Under this system emphasis in the selection for among those eligible to be immigrants within the annual numerical ceiling of 170,000...will be based on the existence of a close family relationship to U.S. citizens or lawful resident aliens regardless of the birthplace of the alien. Reunification of families is to be the foremost consideration. The closer the family relationship the higher the preference. (U.S. Cong. & Admin. News 1965 p. 3352) (Emphasis added).

The statement shows a clear Congressional intent to keep families united. In expressing such intent, the Legislative report invariably links together close relatives of citizens with close relatives of permanent residents. While it is true that the immediate relatives of citizens are given a higher level of priority, it is clear that Congress was motivated by the same spirit and the same humanitarian goals in providing immigration benefits for both the relatives of citizens and the relatives of aliens.

The INS argument that the policy in question is a reasonable manner of protecting the American labor market is also invalid. The policy is both underinclusive and overinclusive and therefore is irrational in equal protection terms. It is overinclusive since it demands that all Western Hemisphere close relatives of resident aliens leave the country whether or not they may be in the labor market. Thus, the Service has established the most pernicious and inexpedient method for dealing with any alleged labor problem. Instead, it could refuse employment authorization for aliens awaiting visa availability, or it could require a non-employment bond as a condition of continued presence in the United States. Instead, it established a blanket requirement that all alien relatives of resident aliens must leave the country whether or not they are working or whether or not their employment would hurt the labor market in any way.

Furthermore, the policy is underinclusive. If the Service were really concerned about protecting American citizens from job competition from aliens who have not yet achieved immigrant status, it should insist that all alien relatives of citizens also leave the country. Since there are 200,000,000 citizens and only 4,000,000 resident aliens the former constitute a far larger target group for illegal aliens marrying Americans and remaining here to work. Yet the Service has explicitly rejected the latter alternative.

In addition the alien relatives of resident aliens will eventually return to the United States when their immigrant visas are issued and enter the labor market then. Thus the Service policy is not rationally related to its alleged purpose and goal.

2. The Operating Instructions Which Implemented Respondents' Discriminatory Policy Violated the Administrative Procedure Act.

An essential feature of the Administrative Procedure Act [5 U.S.C. §551 et seq.] is the requirement that agencies enact rules in a manner designed to insure that the public will be aware of the promulgation of a rule and will be given an opportunity to participate in the rulemaking process and to plan their activities in anticipation of the new rule. To effectuate these ends, an agency is required under 5 U.S.C. §553 to publish general notice of proposed rule-making in the Federal Register at least 30 days in advance of the adoption of the proposed rule, and to provide an opportunity for interested persons to participate in the rule-making process through the submission of written data, views or arguments. Exceptions to the rule-making requirement are made in case of "interpretive rules, general statements of policy, rules of agency organization procedure or practice". Under 5 U.S.C. §551(4), a rule is defined as "an agency statement of general or particular applicability and future effect designed to implement, interpret, or prescribe law or policy . . ." "Rule-making" is defined under the same section as "agency process for the formulating, amending or repealing of a rule."

Analyzed in terms of the definition of "rule" in the Administrative Procedure Act, there is no question that the INS "instruction" of July 17, 1972, and subsequent instructions were "an agency statement of general or particular applicability and future effect designed to implement, interpret or prescribe law or policy". In this regard, the fact that INS chose to call these pronouncements "instructions" does not make them any less rules. In fact, courts have consistently held that it is not the label a particular agency puts upon a given exercise of agency power which is conclusive, but rather that it is what the agency actually does which controls. See Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc. v. United States, 316 U.S. 407, 416 (1942). Here, the instructions were clearly given general applicability and future effect, as to a specific clearly defined class of aliens. The standards by which stays of deportation were to be granted or withheld were sharply modified as to Western Hemisphere natives with alien permanent resident relatives in the United States. In fact, it is clear that INS itself recognized that it was promulgating a new rule which would change the existing rights of a large class of people by providing that cases with dispositions made prior to the effective date, August 1, 1972, would not be disturbed, and that the same would be true of "pipeline" cases in progress.

The court below improperly held that the operating instructions were exempt as "general statements of policy." Furthermore, the court said, the operating instructions did not meet the "substantial impact test" which "places within the rulemaking procedure only those rules which have a 'substantial impact on those regulated'" Texaco, Inc. v. FPC, 412 F.2d 740, 744 (3rd Cir. 1969), that is, rules that change "existing rights and obligations," Lewis Mota v. Secretary of Labor, 469 F.2d 478, 482 (2d Cir. 1972).

But it cannot be denied that petitioners had pre-existing expectations which were extinguished by administrative fiat. Clearly, if petitioners had known of respondents intentions prior to the change, the petitioners might have married prior to the cut-off date of April 10, 1973. Clearly, if Notice of Proposed Rulemaking had been published by INS, the public would have been given an opportunity to respond and submit views prior to the implementation of a new policy affecting the future rights of a large number of lawful permanent resident aliens who might marry non-resident aliens.

In a recent case involving the Board of Parole, which has similar broad discretion with respect to the persons under its supervision, the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia concluded that regulations dealing with the determination of eligibility for parole were not general statements of policy and thus exempt from the APA rulemaking requirements. Pickus v. United States Board of Parole, 507 F.2d 1107 (D.C. Cir. 1974). Since the determination of eligibility factors has "significant consequences" for prisoners, they constituted "substantive agency action, for they define a fairly tight framework to circumscribe the Board's statutorily broad power." Id. at 1113.

Similarly in this case, the new operating instructions had a broad impact on those subject to the district director's broad discretion to grant extended voluntary departure. Restriction of that discretion, just as restriction of the discretion to grant parole, is a rule that requires the advance notice specified by the APA. The failure to publish in accordance with the relevant statutory criteria rendered the operating instructions invalid.

MULLIGAN, Circuit Judge:

This is an appeal from an order of Hon. Lee P. Gagliardi, United States District Judge for the Southern District of New York, entered on February 8, 1974, denying the motion of the appellants for a preliminary injunction in accordance with his opinion of February 6, 1974. We affirm.

I

Rodolphe Noel is an alien and a native and citizen of Haiti. He was admitted to this country on May 24, 1969 as a non-immigrant visitor for pleasure. This status permitted him to stay here for two months. He did not make a timely departure but remained here illegally until he was apprehended by agents of the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) on June 15, 1972. Deportation proceedings were thereupon promptly commenced. At a hearing on June 27, 1972, Noel admitted that he was deportable and represented that he was willing and able to leave the country at his own expense. He was given until September 27, 1972 to depart voluntarily. He again failed to leave and a warrant of deportation issued on July 12, 1973. Noel was advised by letter to report on August 21, 1973 for deportation. Instead of reporting, Noel requested an extension of his time to depart for an indefinite period because, on April 13, 1973, he had married Emiris Noel, a lawful permanent resident of the United States. This marriage, he urged, had exempted him from the requirement of obtaining a labor certification before applying for an immigration visa. 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(14). If an indefinite extension of voluntary departure were granted, Noel would, in effect, be allowed to remain in this country an additional period of as much as two years until a visa became available. The request was denied but deportation was stayed for seven days to permit the institution of court action.

Antoine Petit's position is like unto Noel's. He is an alien and a native and citizen of Haiti who was admitted here on August 4, 1970 as a visitor for pleasure for a two-month stay. He did not leave but rather obtained employment in violation of his non-immigrant status. Londono v. INS, 433 F.2d 635 (2d Cir. 1970) (per curiam). He was apprehended on June 7, 1973. Deportation proceedings were promptly commenced, and, at his hearing on June 8, 1973, Petit admitted that he was deportable and requested that he be permitted to depart voluntarily. He was extended the privilege of voluntary departure until July 8th, 1973. Instead of departing, Petit married Yanick Petit on June 26, 1973. His bride had entered the United States a week before as a permanent resident immigrant. Petit also applied for an extension of voluntary departure until a visa became available. The District Director, by letter dated July 18th, 1973, denied the request and ordered his departure by July 27th, 1973. Petit did not leave and, on August 6, 1973, a warrant of deportation was issued, ordering his departure for Haiti on September 5, 1973.

On August 24, 1973, Noel and Petit and their brides commenced this action in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, seeking a declaratory judgment that the policy of the INS as to extensions of voluntary departure for the relatives of resident aliens was unconstitutional, and further seeking a preliminary injunction enjoining the INS from deporting Noel and Petit. While initially commenced as a class action, the class claim has since been abandoned. Although technically the appeal here is from an order denying a preliminary injunction, the opinion of the court below finally determined the underlying legal and constitutional issues so that the case is ripe for plenary appellate review. Sound judicial administration requires us to avoid subsequent unnecessary proceedings in the district court. See FTC v. Cinderella Career & Finishing Schools, Inc., 404 F.2d 1308, 1311 (D.C. Cir. 1968); Hurwitz v. Directors Guild of America, Inc., 364 F.2d 67 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 385 U.S. 971 (1966); 9 J. Moore, Federal Practice ¶ 110.25[1] (2d ed. 1973).

It is undisputed that aliens who are the parents, children of spouses of an American citizen may enter the country without numerical limitation and need not obtain labor certification, regardless of where they are from. 8 U.S.C. §§ 1151(b) & 1182(a)(14). Aliens who are the parents, children or spouse of a resident alien and who are not from the Western Hemisphere are also exempt from the labor certificate requirement, id. § 1182(a)(14), and receive a special right of preference over others seeking a visa within the relevant quota limit of 170,000, id. § 1153(a). However if the aliens are from the Western Hemisphere and are parents, children or spouses of a resident alien, they are exempt from the labor certificate requirement, id. § 1182(a)(14), but they receive no preference rights, i.e., they, along with all other Western Hemisphere aliens, may obtain visas subject to the 120,000 numerical quota, Act of Oct. 3, 1965, Pub. L. No. 89-236, §21(e), 79 Stat. 921. These differences in treatment between aliens' and citizens' relatives and between Eastern Hemisphere and Western Hemisphere alien relatives of resident aliens were specifically provided for by the 1965 major congressional amendments to the Immigration and Nationality Act which abolished the national origins quota system. Act of Oct. 3, 1965, supra.[1]

Since at least 1952, the law has provided that the privilege of voluntary departure may be granted to a deportable alien at the discretion of the Attorney General. Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952, ch. 5, § 244, 66 Stat. 214, presently codified at 8 U.S.C. § 1254. By regulation, the authority to extend the time within which to voluntarily depart is within the sole discretion of the District Director of the INS. 8 C.F.R. § 244.2. INS policy between 1968 and June 1972 in the New York District had been more liberal than that elsewhere in the nation. Western Hemisphere aliens, such as Noel and Petit, who were in this country and married to permanent resident aliens had been routinely granted extended voluntary departure until an immigrant visa became available. However, on June 27, 1972, Congressman Rodino, Chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, advised the Commissioner of INS that hearings of his Subcommittee on Immigration and Nationality had indicated that the employment of illegal aliens in this country was unfavorably influencing the domestic job market and that routinely permitting them to remain in the United States to await visas was no longer justifiable. The Service informed all its District Directors that, as of July 31st, 1972, Western Hemisphere aliens should not routinely be granted extended departure time, but rather should be offered that privilege only in those cases where compelling circumstances warranted the relief. On April 10, 1973, the policy was liberalized to provide that the earlier New York policy granting extended departure would be applied to those aliens who were present in the United States and who had the requisite family status on or before April 10, 1973. Neither Noel nor Petit was married on April 10, 1973, and hence each is subject to deportation, which has been voluntarily extended by the Service until this litigation is terminated.

1 Prior to 1965, immigration from the Western Hemisphere was not numerically controlled. The prior non-quota status of such aliens was abolished by the 1965 amendments and the special annual quota of 120,000 was established, separate from the annual 170,000 worldwide quota.

Had Noel and Petit married American citizens they would not have been subject to numerical immigration limits. 8 U.S.C. § 1151(b). The INS policy with respect to such aliens is to allow them the privilege of an extension of voluntary departure until they obtain visas, which involves a significantly shorter wait than in the case of an alien married to a resident alien who is subject to numerical limitations. Appellants contend that the INS policy is illegal. They claim (a) that there is nothing in the 1965 amendments to the law which requires the INS to distinguish between immediate family members of resident aliens, on the one hand, or of citizens, on the other, for the purpose of setting voluntary departure dates; (b) that the policy of the INS violates the equal protection concepts inherent in the due process clause of the fifth amendment,[2] and constitutes an abuse of administrative discretion; and (c) that the policy was issued in violation of the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 553. They seek to have the policy voided and to receive the benefits of the old policy under which they may await visas here along with the immediate relatives of American citizens.

2 If a classification would violate the equal protection clause of the fourteenth amendment, then it would also be invalid under the due process clause of the fifth amendment. Johnson v. Robison, 415 U.S. 361, 364 n.4 (1974); Bolling v. Sharpe, 347 U.S. 497 (1954). The fourteenth amendment applies to the states but not to the federal government, which is restricted only by the fifth amendment.

III

The attack upon the constitutionality of the policy of the Service is bottomed upon the contention that alienage is a suspect classification, that, since the policy provides for disparate treatment of the alien spouses of citizens and resident aliens, and, furthermore, since the classification impinges upon the fundamental right of the family to remain intact, the policy must be subject to strict scrutiny. Graham v. Richardson, 403 U.S. 365 (1971).

The cases relied upon by appellants are not controlling here. In Graham v. Richardson, supra, the Court found unconstitutional two state programs which denied welfare benefits to non-citizens or granted them only to aliens who had resided in the United States for a specified time. In Sugarman v. Dougall, 413 U.S. 634 (1973), the Court found that a New York statute violated equal protection rights since it provided that only citizens would be eligible for civil service appointments. In In re Griffiths, 413 U.S. 717 (1973), the Court on a similar basis invalidated a citizenship requirement for admission to the Connecticut bar examination. These cases involved action by states which discriminated with respect to the rights and privileges which persons living in this country possess. None involved the power of INS to administer the immigration laws of the United States, which by their very nature involve the question of alienage.[3]

The Supreme Court has consistently held that Congress has plenary power in the area of immigration. Thus in Galvan v. Press, 347 U.S. 522 (1954), Mr. Justice Frankfurter wrote:

> Policies pertaining to the entry of aliens and their right to remain here are peculiarly concerned with the political conduct of government. In the enforcement of these policies, the Executive Branch of the Govern-

3 In an effort to escape the argument that Graham, Sugarman and Griffiths involved actions by states infringing the rights of aliens, appellants also cite several cases in which Federal restrictions upon the rights of aliens have been struck down. Mow Sun Wong v. Hampton, 500 F.2d 1031 (9th Cir. 1974), cert. granted, 42 U.S.L.W. 3678 (June 10, 1974); Ramos v. United States Civil Service Comm'n, 376 F. Supp. 361 (D.P.R. 1974) (three-judge court); Diaz v. Weinberger, 361 F. Supp. 1 (S.D. Fla. 1973) (three-judge court). Briefly stated, these cases hold that exclusion of aliens from federal civil service employment and imposition of a durational residency requirement as a condition for eligibility for Medicare are unconstitutional. With the Supreme Court cases discussed above, these cases do not go further than to declare that the federal and state governments cannot treat aliens legally residing in this country differently from citizens with regard to certain rights or privileges. The Supreme Court has stated the essential significance of these cases as follows:

> The Fourteenth Amendment and the laws adopted under its authority thus embody a general policy that all persons lawfully in this country shall abide "in any state" on an equality of legal privileges with all citizens under non-discriminatory laws.

Takahashi v. Fish & Game Comm'n, 334 U.S. 410, 420 (1948), relied upon in Graham v. Richardson, supra, 403 U.S. at 374.

These authorities are inapposite in the context of the enforcement of the immigration laws against aliens who, rather than living lawfully in this country, are by their own admission deportable. An examination of some of the cases cited by appellants themselves reveals a recognition by the courts of the relevancy of the fact of alienage in certain situations and the breadth of executive power over enforcement of the immigration laws. Sugarman v. Dougall, 413 U.S. at 646-49; Kleindienst v. Mandel, 408 U.S. 753, 765-67 (1972); Graham v. Richardson, 403 U.S. at 376-80; Ramos v. United States Civil Service Comm'n, 376 F. Supp. at 366 n.8.

> ment must respect the procedural safeguards of due process .... But that the formulation of these policies is entrusted exclusively to Congress has become about as firmly embedded in the legislative and judicial tissues of our body politic as any aspect of our government.

347 U.S. at 531 (citations omitted).

Recently, in Kleindienst v. Mandel, 408 U.S. 753, 766 (1972), the Court reaffirmed the plenary power of Congress, quoting with approval the opinion of the first Mr. Justice Harlan in Lem Moon Sing v. United States, 158 U.S. 538, 547 (1895):

> "The power of Congress to exclude aliens altogether from the United States, or to prescribe the terms and conditions upon which they may come to this country, and to have its declared policy in that regard enforced exclusively through executive officers, without judicial intervention, is settled by our previous adjudications."

There can be no doubt but that Noel and Petit as unadmitted and non-resident aliens have no constitutional right to enter and to remain in this country. See Galvan v. Press, supra, 347 U.S. at 530-32. It is equally clear that their wives as resident aliens have no constitutional right to keep them here on the theory that the integrity of the family is protected by equal protection principles. The cases relied upon by appellants to support the contrary contention, Loving v. Virginia, 388 U.S. 1 (1967) and Stanley v. Illinois, 405 U.S. 645 (1972), involved interferences by states and not INS, and thus cannot control decision in an area in which, as we have noted, the Government has broad powers. Other precedents suggest the error of appellants' position. In Zemel v. Rusk, 381 U.S. 1 (1965), the Court upheld the right of the Government to refuse to validate an American passport for travel to Cuba despite the claim that there was an interference with the constitutional right of the citizen to travel. In Kleindienst v. Mandel, supra, the Court upheld the refusal of the Attorney General, through INS, to waive visa requirements of an alien scholar despite the claim of American intellectuals that their first amendment rights to hear, speak with and debate the foreign professor were violated. More directly in point is Silverman v. Rogers, 437 F.2d 102 (1st Cir. 1970), cert. denied, 402 U.S. 983 (1971), in which the court refused to enjoin the deportation of an alien who was married to an American citizen despite the claim that the action was unconstitutional since it destroyed the constitutional rights of the parties to live together in marriage. The same argument was rejected in Swartz v. Rogers, 254 F.2d 338 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 357 U.S. 928 (1958). Judge Prettyman commented succinctly:

> Certainly deportation would put burdens upon the marriage. It would impose upon the wife the choice of living abroad with her husband or living in this country without him. But deportation would not in any way destroy the legal union which the marriage created. The physical conditions of the marriage may change, but the marriage continues. Under these circumstances we think the wife has no constitutional right which is violated by the deportation of her husband.

254 F.2d at 339.

In view of the plenary power vested in Congress to fix and in the executive to enforce, the terms and conditions of entry and stay in the United States, alienage cannot be a suspect classification in this context, nor is there an interference with any fundamental rights to marry and to raise a family. This being so, it follows that the strict or compelling interest test espoused by appellants cannot be applied in ths case.

The Government has argued that the appropriate standard of review of the INS policy before us is the flexible approach taken by this court in Boraas v. Village of Belle Terre, 476 F.2d 806 (2d Cir. 1973). It had been suggested that Supreme Court doctrine in the equal protection area had evolved from a two-tiered standard to a less rigid formula which allowed for consideration of factors otherwise largely ignored. Gunther, The Supreme Court, 1971 Term—Foreward: In Search of Evolving Doctrine on a Changing Court: A Model for a Newer Equal Protection, 86 Harv. L. Rev. 1 (1972). Although the precise contours of an appropriate intermediate test remained somewhat unclear, Comment, Equal Protection in Transition: An Analysis and a Proposal, 41 Fordham L. Rev. 605 (1973), this court applied that test in Boraas. However, the Supreme Court refused to apply an intermediate test in San Antonio School District v. Rodriguez, 411 U.S. 1 (1973), despite the strong urging of a dissent, 411 U.S. at 98-110 (Marshall, J., dissenting), citing, inter alia, Gunther, supra. More recently, the Supreme Court reversed the decision of this court in Boraas and decided the issue of certain zoning restrictions on the basis of the traditional limited scrutiny standard. Village of Belle Terre v. Boraas, 416 U.S. 1 (1974). It is thus unclear whether or not the Court accepts the intermediate test which courts and scholars had perceived in some of its recent decisions. Citizens Committee for Faraday Wood v. Lindsay, slip op. 585, 589 n.5 (2d Cir. Dec. 5, 1974). However, even if the intermediate test retains some vitality, we conclude, in light of the extensive power over immigration possessed by the INS, that the limited scrutiny test should be applied here, as it was in Rodriguez and Boraas, supra.

There is a rational relationship which supports the policy of INS under attack here. The 1965 amendments reflect the purpose of Congress "to protect the American economy from job competition and from adverse working standards as a consequence of immigrant workers entering the labor market . . . ." S. Rep. No. 748, 89th Cong., 1st Sess., 1965 U.S. Code, Cong. & Admin. News. 3329. It was the Congress which made the distinction between immediate relatives of American citizens and permanent resident aliens and which entrusted the Attorney General with jurisdiction to grant extended voluntary departures to Western Hemisphere aliens. Although this policy was exercised liberally in the New York District, by 1972 a long waiting list of such aliens developed and the wait for an immigrant visa approached the period of two years.[4] Western Hemisphere aliens were coming to the United States in large numbers and remaining illegally in the expectation of a marriage which would assure their continuing residence here. In view of domestic employment problems which continue to affect American workers, the policy of INS to discourage the practice is understandable and certainly bears a rational and substantial relationship to the avowed purpose of Congress to protect the American economy. Wong Wing Hang v. INS, 360 F.2d 715, 718-19 (2d Cir. 1966). The fact that greater liberality is accorded to the spouses of American citizens is, in our view, a matter of the discretion of INS which, as we have pointed out, is plenary in this area.

4 The appellants admit in their brief that "[u]nder present conditions, after the filing of a Western Hemisphere visa application and the contemporaneous assignment of a priority date for visa assignment, the subsequent wait for visa assignment can be as long as 22 months or more."

Certainly there is no abuse of discretion in the cases before us. Both Noel and Petit had been initially granted the privilege of voluntary departure pursuant to their request, but had then abused it. Under these circumstances, there is no reason for judicial interference. See Bowes v. INS, 443 F.2d 30 (9th Cir. 1971) (per curiam); United States ex rel. Lee Pao Fen v. Esperdy, 423 F.2d 6, 8-9 (2d Cir. 1970). In fact, granting the relief sought would place Noel and Petit in a position of precedence over those Western Hemisphere aliens who have made applications for visas in regular course and who are awaiting their turn for admission. There is no reason to prefer those who have flouted the immigration laws, which permitted their entry for a limited time and purpose, over those who have steadfastly and patiently followed legal procedures.

IV

The appellants here finally contend that the INS policy is invalid since it violates the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 551 et seq. Section 553(b) & (c) requires that an agency which proposes to issue a rule must publish a notice in the Federal Register indicating the time, place and nature of the public rulemaking procedure, and give interested parties an opportunity to participate in the rulemaking by submission of data. It is admitted that no such notice was provided here. Nor is there any contention made that the appellants had any actual notice of the INS policy change which would excuse publication in the Federal Register. See United States v. Aarons, 310 F.2d 341, 348 (2d Cir. 1962).

Although the Act does exempt from judicial review agency action which is committed to agency discretion by law, 5 U.S.C. § 701(a)(2), it seems settled that we do have jurisdiction to review exercises of INS discretion to determine whether they are arbitrary or capricious. See Foti v. INS, 375 U.S. 217, 228-30 (1963); United States ex rel. Hintopoulos v. Shaughnessy, 353 U.S. 72, 77 (1957). On this basis we have already determined that there was no such abuse here. Although no authority precisely in point has been found, it would seem clear that we also have jurisdiction to determine whether or not INS followed the Act's rulemaking procedures. INS argues that the appellants have no standing to attack the procedure since none of them was married at the time the change in policy was made. Mrs. Petit was not even in the country on August 1, 1972 or on April 10, 1973, when the policy was made and modified respectively; her husband was not apprehended until June, 1973; and both Noel and Petit had represented prior to their marriages that they would leave voluntarily. The status or whereabouts of Mrs. Noel does not appear in the record; we know only that she did marry her husband on June 27, 1973, which was after the dates in question. We need not, however, reach the question of standing here since section 553(b)(A) exempts "general statements of policy" from the notice requirements of section 553(b). The court below found that the August 1, 1972 policy and the April 10, 1973 modification are within the statutory exception for general statements of policy. While the distinction between a rule as defined in section 551(4), which must be published, and a "general statement of policy," which is not defined in the Act, is enshrouded in considerable smog, we hold that the policy statements complained of were properly held to be within the "general statements of policy" exception.[5]

5 Appellants relied in their brief upon a decision by Judge Motley granting a motion for a preliminary injunction in Felipe Demaren v. Attorney General, 73 Civ. 1079 (S.D.N.Y. 1973). In that case, the plaintiff sought injunctive relief against denial of a stay of deportation pursuant to a policy similar to the one before us, and the court held that the policy ought to have been published pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 553(b). However, subsequent to the filing of briefs in the case before us, Judge Motley vacated the preliminary injunction in Demaren, denied a motion for a permanent injunction and dismissed the complaint, concluding on further consideration that there was no requirement that the policy at issue be published pursuant to section 553(b).

In the first place, the regulation governing the issue of extensions of time to depart which is here relevant explicitly provides that the "[a]uthority to extend the time within which to depart . . . is within the sole jurisdiction of the district director." 8 C.F.R. § 244.2. The "instructions" complained of in this case do not purport to amend the published regulation or to oust the District Director of his "sole" discretion. In fact, the District Director of New York was the only INS officer who "routinely" extended the stay in the case of an alien married to a resident alien; the practice in the rest of the country was otherwise. We construe the instruction to be simply a statement by the agency of its general policy as a guideline for the District Directors. A distinctive characteristic of the general policy statement was indicated by Judge Friendly when he stated in his Holmes Lectures that "one of the values of the policy statement [is] the education of agency members in the agency's work." H. Friendly, The Federal Administrative Agencies 145-46 (1962) (emphasis added). One scholar has suggested that "[i]t may be that 'general statements of policy' are rules directed primarily at the staff of an agency describing how it will conduct agency discretionary functions, while other rules are directed primarily at the public in an effort to impose obligations on them." Bonfield, Some Tentative Thoughts on Public Participation in the Making of Interpretative Rules and General Statements of Policy under the APA, 23 Admin. L. Rev. 101, 115 (1970-71). See also Parker, The

The same thought is expressed in the so-called "substantial impact" test, which places within the rulemaking procedure only those rules which have "a substantial impact on those regulated," Texaco, Inc. v. FPC, 412 F.2d 740, 744 (3d Cir. 1969), that is, ordinarily rules that change "existing rights and obligations," Lewis-Mota v. Secretary of Labor, 469 F.2d 478, 482 (2d Cir. 1972).[7] We cannot conclude that the instructions at issue here changed the existing right of the appellants to have their applications for extensions of time to depart authorized in the sole discretion of the district director. As noted below, the appellants may still be entitled under the regulations to deferred voluntary departure on the basis of hardship.

The INS policy under attack here, considered according to the appropriate equal protection standard, does not violate the fifth amendment, and there was clearly no abuse of administrative discretion. Since the policy was a general statement of policy rather than a rule, there was no violation of the publication requirement of the APA. We conclude, therefore, that the decision below must be affirmed.

Affirmed.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

RODOLPHE NOEL, EMIRIS NOEL, EDDY ANTOINE PETIT, and YANICK PETIT, on Behalf of Themselves and all Aliens in the United States similarly situated,	:	OPINION
Plaintiffs,	:
-against-	:	73 Civ. 3682
JAMES F. GREEN, as Commissioner of the Immigration & Naturalization Service, and SOL MARKS, as New York District Director of the United States Immigration & Naturalization Service,	:	#40347
Defendants.	:

GAGLIARDI, D. J.

This is an action by Rodolphe Noel, Emiris Noel, Eddy Antoine Petit and Yanick Petit on behalf of themselves and other aliens similarly situated challenging the policy of the Immigration and Naturalization Service (hereinafter the Service) which denies to Western Hemisphere aliens married to permanent resident aliens and illegally in this country awaiting issuance of a visa the discretionary relief of an extended departure date, except upon a showing of compelling factors. By motion for a preliminary injunction pursuant to Rule 65 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure plaintiffs seek an order restraining the deportation of Rodolphe Noel and Eddy Antoine Petit and restraining the implementation of the policy pending the determination of this declaratory judgment action. The motion for preliminary relief is denied upon examination of the affidavits submitted by the parties. Dopp v. Franklin National Bank, 461 F.2d 873, 979 (2d Cir. 1972).

Rodolphe Noel, a native and citizen of Haiti, was admitted to this country as a non-immigrant visitor in May, 1969 on a two month temporary basis. Having remained longer than permitted, Noel was eventually apprehended by the Service on June 15, 1972, and deportation proceedings against him were commenced the following day. During the course of the proceedings, Noel applied for and was granted the discretionary relief of voluntary departure pursuant to which he was to depart by September 27, 1972, or, failing to do so, a deportation order to Haiti would become effective. A warrant of deportation was issued, effective August 21, 1973, when Noel failed to comply with the order. On August 20, 1973 Noel requested the District Director to extend the date for his voluntary departure on the basis of his marriage on April 19, 1973 to plaintiff, Mrs. Emiris Noel, a permanent resident alien of the United States until such time as a visa became available. The application was denied.

Plaintiff, Eddy Antoine Petit, a native and citizen of Haiti, is also presently subject to a warrant of deportation. Similarly admitted for two months as a non-immigrant visitor in August, 1970, Petit remained longer than permitted, and he was apprehended by the Service on June 7, 1973. At his deportation hearing, Petit also applied for and was granted the discretionary relief of voluntary departure. He was given thirty days in which to leave, or in the alternative, an order of deportation to Haiti would issue. Prior to the expiration of the thirty day period, Petit married plaintiff, Mrs. Yanick Petit on June 26, 1973. Proceeding on the same basis as plaintiff Noel, Petit made an application for suspension of voluntary departure until a visa became available. Petit's request was denied, and departure was set for July 27, 1973. Following his failure to depart, the Service issued a warrant of deportation effective September 5, 1973. Deportation of both Noel and Petit has been voluntarily stayed by the Service pending decision on this motion.

Section 244(e) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, 8 U.S.C. §1254(e), provides that in the course of a deportation proceeding an alien may apply for the privilege of voluntary departure. The Regulations permit the Special Inquiry Officer in his discretion to specify the time within which the alien must depart. 8 C.F.R. §244.1 (1973). "Authority to extend the time within which to depart voluntarily specified initially by a special inquiry officer or the Board is within the sole jurisdiction of the district director." 8 C.F.R. §244.2 (1973).

To mitigate the hardship an order of deportation has on a Western Hemisphere alien married to a permanent resident alien and illegally in this country, the District Director in New York followed a policy from 1968 through part of 1972 of granting an extension of voluntary departure to those deportable aliens pending issuance of a permanent visa.[1] However, hearings conducted by the Subcommittee on Immigration and Nationality of the House of Representatives Committee on the Judiciary in early 1972 revealed the adverse effect such a policy was having on the domestic labor market. Moreover, by 1972 the large number of persons from the Western Hemisphere seeking the limited number of available visas resulted in a substantial waiting list.[2] Based on this information and a recommendation of the Subcommittee's Chairman, Congressman Peter W. Rodino, Jr., the Service established guidelines with respect to extended voluntary departures effective August 1, 1972. Under the altered policy, an alien's status of marriage to a permanent resident alien is insufficient in itself to warrant deferred departure; stays are to be granted only in individual cases upon a showing of compelling factors. See Memorandum, Associate Commissioner, Operations to All District Directors, et al., July 17, 1972, p. 2.

In response to pending legislation introduced in Congress which will significantly change the status of Western Hemisphere aliens with respect to preference quotas[3] and adjustment of status,[4] and upon the recommendation of Congressman Rodino, the Service announced on April 11, 1973 that Western Hemisphere alien spouses of permanent resident aliens could, as a matter of discretion, be granted an extended voluntary departure. Less than two weeks later, the Service confined the modification to those aliens who were in the country and married to a permanent resident alien as of April 10, 1973. Telegram dated April 20, 1973 from Acting Commissioner Greene. All other Western Hemisphere aliens who entered the country and married a permanent resident alien after that date are treated under the policy effective August 1, 1972. The Service maintained that this modification was adopted to delay "enforcement of departure of specified relatives who are already in the United States," but "not adopted as an invitation to aliens to thereafter enter this country." See Memorandum, Associate Commissioner, Operations to Regional Commissioner, San Pedro, California, May 16, 1973, p. 2.

Under Section 201(b) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, 8 U.S.C. §1151(b), aliens who are the children, spouses or parents of United States citizens are classified as "immediate relatives" and may be granted immigrant visas without regard to numerical limitations or the hemisphere of origin. Once so classified, such relatives may obtain a permanent visa within a matter of months. Consequently, an alien spouse of a United States citizen is generally accorded an extension of voluntary departure pending issuance of a permanent visa.

Plaintiffs contend that the August 1, 1972 policy and its April 10, 1973 modification constitute: (1) an arbitrary, capricious and gross abuse of administrative discretion; (2) a violation of the constitutional guarantee of equal protection of laws; (3) a violation of the publication requirement of the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. §553; and (4) a violation of the constitutional principle of separation of powers, see Kilburn v. Thompson, 103 U.S. 168, 190 (1881).

"[T]he two-fold requirement for a preliminary injunction is a demonstration of probability of success on the merits and a showing that irreparable harm will result if such relief is denied." Gulf & Western Industries, Inc. v. The Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company, Inc., 476 F.2d 687, 692 (2d Cir. 1973).

First, plaintiffs maintain that the differences in treatment between alien spouses of United States citizens and alien spouses of permanent resident aliens, and within the latter category, between aliens present in the country and married as of April 10, 1973 and those who arrive or marry after that date constitute a gross abuse of discretion and are unlawful. The Second Circuit has held that in the grant or refusal of voluntary departure, the Service and the administrator may establish groups of persons entitled to discretionary relif so long as the classifications are rationally related to the statutory scheme. Buckley v. Gibney, 332 F.Supp. 790 (S.D.N.Y.), aff'd per curiam, 449

F.2d 1305 (2d Cir. 1971), cert. denied, 405 U.S. 919 (1972); Fook Hong Mak v. Immigration and Naturalization Service, 435 F.2d 728 (2d Cir. 1970); Lam Tat Sin v. Esperdy, 334 F.2d 999 (2d Cir. 1964).

The treatment of married Western Hemisphere aliens for purposes of extended voluntary departure on the basis of classification of spouse is reasonable in view of the statutory scheme which places no immigrant visa quota on spouses of citizens, but imposes a numerical limitation on spouses of permanent resident aliens. In practical terms, the apparent difference in time required to obtain a permanent visa substantiates the differentiation. Furthermore, it is certainly within the Service's discretion to conclude that other considerations may at some time warrant lenient treatment, but that to grant it in all situations would encourage aliens to enter illegally, and acquire the status, and would open a loophole in disregard of the statute.

Plaintiffs second argument is that the two classifications in issue deny plaintiffs the constitutional guarantee of equal protection of the laws. In Borass v. The Village of Belle Terre, 476 F.2d 806 (2d Cir.) rehearing en banc denied, prob. juris. noted, 42 U.S.L.W. 3226 (U.S. October 15, 1973) (No. 191), the Second Circuit held that: "If the classification, upon review of facts bearing upon the foregoing relevant factors, is shown to have a substantial relationship to a lawful objective and is not void for other reasons, such as overbreadth, it will be upheld." 476 F.2d at 814. Distinctions drawn for the purpose of granting stays of deportation have consistently passed constitutional muster in this Circuit. Buckley v. Gibney, supra, 332 F.Supp. at 795; Application of Amoury, 307 F.Supp. 213 (S.D.N.Y. 1969)(Weinfeld, Jr.); see Faustino v. Immigration and Naturalization Service, 432 F.2d Cir.), cert. denied, 401 U.S. 921 (1971); Mitai v. Immigration and Naturalization Service, 343 F.2d 466 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 302 U.S. 816 (1963); accord, Perdido v. Immigration and Naturalization Service, 420 F.2d 1179 (5th Cir. 1969). The classifications in this case are no less substantially related to the statutory scheme which treats relatives of citizens differently from relatives of permanent resident aliens than those classifications based on other statutory distinctions which distinguish between the nature of the work one performs, see Buckley v. Gibney, supra, or the citizenship of one's parents, see Application of Amoury, supra.

Third, plaintiffs contend that the August 1, 1972 policy and April 10, 1973 modification are invalid since the Service failed to publish the "rules" on thirty days' notice in accordance with the provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. §553 (b), (d). Under the test set forth in Lewis-Mota v. Secretary of Labor, 469 F.2d 475 (2d Cir. 1972), whether given instructions are to be considered a "rule" under 5 U.S.C. §551(4) or within the exception for a "general statement of policy" under 5 U.S.C. §553(b), the Court must look to the "substantial impact of the action" on the "existing rights and obligations of the parties." 469 F.2d at 482. In Lewis-Mota, aliens admitted to this country with labor certifications based on a precertified list of jobs in short supply found themselves no longer certified (after their temporary visas expired) following the Secretary of Labor's suspension of the precertified lists without notice. The court invalidated the rule based on the Service's failure to publish it on thirty days' notice. Neither at the time the instructions were altered on August 1, 1972, nor at the time the Service determined to grant the benefit to those aliens who were already in the cojntry and married to a permanent resident alien on April 10, 1973, were plaintiffs Noel and Petit married to permanent resident aliens. In fact, each may still be entitled under the Regulations to a deferred voluntary departure on the basis of hardship, in the discretion of the district director, as is any deportable alien whether married or not. 8 C.F.R. §§ 244.1 and 244.2 (1973).

Plaintiffs' final argument that the Service abdicated its statutory responsibility to the Chairman of the Subcommittee on Immigration and Nationality in violation of the constitutional principle of separation of powers fails wide of the mark. While it is conceded that the Chairman made certain recommendations to the Service based on information gathered during congressional hearings, correspondence from the Service indicated that to the extent followed, the changes in the instructions were based on the information provided, and not upon an order from the House Subcommittee.[5]

Upon review of plaintiffs' arguments, the probability of ultimate success on the merits is not sufficiently likely to warrant the preliminary relief requested. Accordingly, the motion for a preliminary injunction is denied.

So Ordered.

1. The affidavits of the parties are unclear as to what periods of time a formal policy to grant deferred departure was effective prior to 1972. It is certain, however, that New York's District Director routinely granted lenient treatment. (Government's Exhibit N, Letter Regional Commissioner, Burlington, Vermont to District Director, New York, June 9, 1972). For purposes of this motion it is unnecessary to determine whether a policy of leniency was consistently followed by district directors prior to July 31, 1972, or whether inconsistent policies were followed by district directors in the exercise of their discretion.

2. Under the amendments to the Immigration and Nationality Act in 1965, Western Hemisphere aliens are treated separately for purposes of permanent visas from the rest of the world, and a numerical limitation is established to be filled on a first come, first served basis. Section 101(a)(27) and 201(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, 8 U.S.C. §§1101(a)(27) and 1151(a). For aliens from the Western Hemisphere as well as other aliens, who wish to immigrate for the purpose of entering the domestic labor market, the statute requires a labor certification from the Secretary of Labor to the effect that entry will not adversely affect the domestic labor market. Western Hemisphere aliens who are parents, spouses or children of United States citizens or of permanent resident aliens are excepted from this requirement. Section 212(a)(14) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, 8 U.S.C. §1182(a)(14). Weather certified or excepted from certification, issuance of visas to Western Hemisphere aliens is subject to the numerical limitations in the statute.

3. Under proposed H.R. 981, the two separate quotas for Western Hemisphere aliens and "Worldwide" aliens would be replaced by one overall numerical ceiling. The visa preference presently applicable to only Worldwide aliens, which accords alien spouses of permanent resident aliens preference, will apply to Western Hemisphere aliens as well. Under the proposal, immediate relatives of permanent resident aliens will be given first preference status.

4. Under proposal H.R. 982, Section 245 of the Immigration and Nationality Act, 8 U.S.C. §1255 which presently permits aliens under prescribed conditions to adjust to a permanent status while in this country will apply to Western Hemisphere aliens. The exclusion of Western Hemisphere aliens from this under the present law has given rise to the problems underlying the issues in this case.

Special Bulletin No. 9

CONGRESSMAN RODINO ASKS FOR DELAY OF
ENFORCED DEPARTURE OF CERTAIN WESTERN HEMISPHERE ALIENS

As reported in AICC NEWS, Vol., XVIII, No. 4, the Immigration and Naturalization Service at the suggestion of the House Judiciary Subcommittee on Immigration and Nationality ceased its policy of granting automatic deferred departure status for aliens in the professional classes, and natives of the Western Hemisphere with close lawful resident alien relatives in the United States. Noting that Subcommittee No. 1 was in the process of considering new legislation regarding the Western Hemisphere immigration situation, Rep. Rodino, Chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, suggested to Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, Raymond F. Farrell in a letter of March 28, 1973 as follows:

Dear Mr. Commissioner:

I am sure you are aware that the Members of Subcommittee No. I of this Committee are commencing extensive hearings on legislation designed to establish a preference system for the Western Hemisphere.

My bill, H.R. 981, to amend the Immigration and Nationality Act in that respect is under active consideration by the Subcommittee. Knowing of their diligence and their awareness of the need for such legislation, it is my firm belief that legislation equalizing the two hemispheres will be favorably acted upon by the Committee during the current session of the Congress.

With that in mind, coupled with the fact that legislation permitting the adjustment of status of certain natives of the Western Hemisphere has already been ordered favorably reported to the House of Representatives, I believe that you should consider issuing instructions to your Field Offices to delay enforcing departure of natives of the Western Hemisphere who are immediate relatives as defined in section 201(b) of the Immigration and Nationality Act; the unmarried sons or daughters of United States citizens; and the spouse or unmarried son or daughter of an alien who has been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence.

I feel certain that you will agree that this course of action will alleviate much hardship and that the interest of humanity will be better served. The uniting of families has been paramount in all consideration of legislation in the field of immigration.

Kindest regards.

Sincerely,

(signed) PETER W. RODINO, JR.

ON PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT

BRIEF FOR THE RESPONDENTS IN OPPOSITION

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the court of appeals (Pet. App. 1a-16a) is reported at 508 F.2d 1023. The opinion of the district court (Pet. App. 17a-28a) is reported at 376 F. Supp. 1095.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the court of appeals was entered on January 3, 1975. The petition for a writ of certiorari was filed on April 3, 1975. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. 1254(1).

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

Aliens who are unlawfully in this country but who marry permanent resident aliens are eligible by statute to receive visas that will allow them to live in this country legally. Another statute allows Eastern Hemisphere aliens to receive such visas under a special preference. Western Hemisphere aliens, however, must wait until a visa becomes available under the quota rules. It is the policy of the Immigration and Naturalization Service that, in the absence of exceptional circumstances, an illegal alien must leave this country until a visa authorizing his return becomes available. The questions presented are:

1. Whether this policy denies petitioners equal protection of the laws.

2. Whether this policy is invalid because it was announced without notice and opportunity to comment.

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS, STATUTES AND REGULATION INVOLVED

Article I, Section 8, clause 4 of the United States Constitution provides in relevant part:

> The Congress shall have Power * * * To establish an uniform Rule of Naturalization * * *.

The Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution provides in relevant part:

> No person shall be * * * deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law * * *.

The relevant portions of the Administrative Procedure Act are set out at Pet. 3-4.

Section 21(e) of the Act of October 3, 1965, 79 Stat. 921, provides in relevant part with respect to immigrants from the Western Hemisphere:

> * * * the number of special immigrants [entitled to admission for permanent residence], exlusive of special immigrants who are immediate relatives of United States citizens * * * shall not, [in any fiscal year], exceed a total of 120,000.

8 U.S.C. 1254(e) provides in relevant part:

> The Attorney General may, in his discretion, permit any alien under deportation proceedings, other than [enumerated classes of aliens], to depart voluntarily from the United States at his own expense in lieu of deportation * * *.

8 C.F.R. 244.2 provides in relevant part:

> Authority to extend the time within which to depart * * * is within the sole jurisdiction of the district director.

STATEMENT

The facts are not in dispute and are set out in the opinion of the court of appeals (Pet. App. 2a-4a). Petitioners Rodolphe Noel and Antoine Petit are natives and citizens of Haiti. Noel was admitted to this country on May 24, 1969, as a non-immigrant visitor for pleasure and was authorized to stay for two months. He remained illegally beyond the prescribed time and was apprehended on June 15, 1972. Deportation proceedings were commenced, and at a hearing on June 27, 1972, Noel admitted that he was deportable and requested the privilege of voluntary departure in lieu of deportation. He was given until September 27, 1972, to depart voluntarily. He again failed to leave. A warrant of deportation was issued on July 12, 1973, and Noel was directed to report on August 21, 1973, to be deported. Instead of reporting, he requested an indefinite extension of voluntary departure while awaiting issuance of a visa in light of his marriage, on April 13, 1973, to petitioner Emiris Noel, a permanent resident alien. The New York district director of the Immigration and Naturalization Service (the INS) denied the request.

Petitioner Antoine Petit was admitted to the country on August 4, 1970, as a visitor for pleasure for two months. He did not depart as required and obtained employment in violation of his non-immigrant status. He was apprehended on June 7, 1973. He, too, conceded deportability and requested voluntary departure. He was given until July 8, 1973, to depart. On June 26, 1973, he married petitioner Yanick Petit, who had entered the United States a week earlier as a permanent resident immigrant. He then requested an extension of voluntary departure until a visa became available. The district director denied the request and required him to leave the country by July 27, 1973. He did not leave, and on August 6, 1973, a warrant of deportation was issued.

On August 24, 1973, petitioners brought suit in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York seeking a declaratory judgment that the policy of INS declining to permit aliens to remain in this country pending the issuance of a visa was unconstitutional. They also sought a preliminary injunction to prohibit INS from deporting any of them. The district court denied the motion for a preliminary injunction (Pet. App. 17a-28a), and the court of appeals affirmed (Pet. App. 1a-16a).[1] The court considered and rejected the claims made here.

ARGUMENT

1. Aliens, from whatever country of origin, who are the parents, children or spouses of American citizens may enter this country without prior labor certification or numerical limitation. 8 U.S.C. 1151(a), (b) and 1182(a)(14). Similarly, aliens who are the parents, children or spouses of resident aliens and who are not from the Western Hemisphere, are exempt from the labor certification requirement (8 U.S.C. 1182(a)(14)) and, although they are subject to a quota limit of 170,000, they receive a special right of preference over others seeking a visa within that yearly quota limit (8 U.S.C. 1153(a)). As a result, they receive visas very quickly. On the other hand, Western Hemisphere aliens (such as petitioners) who are the immediate relatives of permanent resident aliens, although exempt from prior labor certification, are subject to the yearly numerical limit of 120,000 visas for permanent residence and enjoy no right of preference over others seeking visas within the same limit. Act of October 3, 1965, Sec. 21(e), 79 Stat. 921. We have been informed by INS that the current waiting period for the issuance of visas to persons in this category is approximately two years.

Since 1940 the Attorney General has had statutory discretion to permit the voluntary departure of deportable aliens (8 U.S.C. 1254(e)). The authority to grant this privilege and to set the date for departure has been delegated to district directors (8 C.F.R. 244.2). The national policy of INS has been that deportable Western Hemisphere aliens must leave and wait abroad until they become eligible for visas, even though married to a permanent resident alien. The New York district, departing from this rule, had in the past routinely granted "extended voluntary departure" pending availability of a visa.

The New York district's practice reversed to the norm in the summer of 1972 when INS informed all district directors, including the New York district director, that as of July 31, 1972, Western Hemisphere aliens should be granted extended voluntary departure only if compelling circumstances warranted the privilege.

[1] Petitioners appealed from an order denying a preliminary injunction. The court of appeals concluded, however, that the district court's decision on the underlying legal and constitutional issues was final. It therefore treated petitioners' claims on the merits.

This statement of policy was prompted by a letter to the Commissioner of INS from Congressman Rodino, Chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, advising the Commissioner that evidence before the Subcommittee on Immigration and Nationality indicated that the employment of illegal aliens in this country was unfavorably influencing the domestic job market, and that routinely permitting deportable aliens to remain in the country pending issuance of visas was not justifiable.[2] On April 10, 1973, again in response to a letter from Congressman Rodino (Pet. App. 29a-30a), the INS provided that aliens present in the United States and who had acquired the requisite family status on or before April 10, 1973, would be allowed to remain pending visa issuance in accordance with the earlier New York practice. On the other hand, the policy was not to be applied prospectively so as to act "as an invitation to aliens to thereafter enter this country, acquire the specified relationship, and remain unlawfully" (Exh. K, p. 2, Letter of Acting INS Commissioner Greene). Petitioners' marriages took place on April 13, 1973, and June 26, 1973.

2. Petitioners' primary contention (Pet. 10) is that the policy requiring aliens from the Western Hemisphere who are illegally in this country to depart until visas become available to them cannot withstand the "close judicial scrutiny" to which classifications based on alienage are subject (Sugarman v. Dougall, 413 U.S. 634), and violates the "fundamental right" of the family to remain intact (Stanley v. Illinois, 405 U.S. 645). These arguments are insubstantial.

[2]This letter is reprinted as an Appendix, infra.

The power of Congress to fix, and of the executive to enforce, "the conditions under which aliens are to be permitted to enter and remain in this country" is plenary (Flemming v. Nestor, 363 U.S. 603, 616; Galvan v. Press, 347 U.S. 522, 531), so much so that this power is "largely immune from judicial inquiry or interference." Harisiades v. Shaughnessy, 342 U.S. 580, 589. Yet here, the source of petitioners' complaint lies with acts of Congress. Congress determined that aliens married to citizens are entitled to a preference; Congress decided that Eastern Hemisphere aliens married to permanent resident aliens are entitled to a preference; Congress decided that Western Hemisphere aliens married to permanent resident aliens are not entitled to a preference. We do not think it open to doubt that Congress has the power to make such decisions.

The INS policy of which petitioners complain is a policy putting aliens who are illegally in this country on a footing similar to that of aliens who have not yet arrived; that is, the INS requires aliens to live up to the limitations on the visas by which they initially entered this country and to leave when their permitted stay has expired. As the court of appeals observed (Pet. App. 13a):

> * * * granting the relief sought would place Noel and Petit in a position of precedence over those Western Hemisphere aliens who have made application for visas in regular course and who are awaiting their turn for admission. There is no reason to prefer those who have flouted the immigration laws, which permitted their entry for a limited time and purpose, over those who have steadfastly and patiently followed legal procedures.

Petitioners have demanded, in effect, that the INS administratively provide the immigration preference that Congress has withheld. The INS has declined to provide such a preference to deportable aliens in petitioners' position and has required such aliens to await their turn in order of preference before they can take up legitimate residence in this country. Nothing in the Constitution precludes the INS from implementing the statutes in this manner.[3]

Petitioners argue that the INS policy is unconstitutional because alienage is a "suspect" classification. But this argument fails to take account of the nature of the policy under attack. The cases cited by petitioners[4] deal with discrimination against aliens lawfully admitted for per-

[3]It is, therefore, not necessary to explore petitioners' contention that the INS policy is irrational and not supported by compelling interests. The government argued in the district court and the court of appeals that the policy requiring deportable aliens to leave the country until they could obtain a visa was justified by the exigencies of the domestic labor market; the courts below agreed (See Pet. App. 12a). But the more fundamental justification for the INS policy is that it simply implements the policy of Congress; petitioners are complaining that the INS must advance some compelling interest not to relieve them of burdens placed upon them by Congress. We submit that an administrative agency is not required to provide reasons, compelling or otherwise, for declining to provide discretionary relief from congressional policy.

[4]Graham v. Richardson, 403 U.S. 365; Sugarman v. Dougall, supra; and In re Griffiths, 413 U.S. 717, upon which petitioners rely in demanding close judicial scrutiny of INS' policy, involved state classifications based on alienage. But federal power to act in respect to aliens is plenary, and the proposition that alienage is a "suspect" category as to federal legislative or executive action is inaccurate.

Nor do Mow Sun Wong v. Hampton, 500 F.2d 1031 (C.A. 9), certiorari granted, 417 U.S. 944, restored to the calendar for reargument, March 3, 1975, and Diaz v. Weinberger, 361 F. Supp. 1 (S.D. Fla.), probable jurisdiction noted, 416 U.S. 980, restored to the calendar for reargument, March 3, 1975, support petitioners' claim. We believe that those cases were incorrectly decided. Whether or not they were correctly decided, however, they go no further, as the court of appeals noted (Pet. App. 8a, n. 3), "than to declare that the federal and state governments cannot treat aliens legally residing in this country differently from citizens with regard to certain rights or privileges." Neither case can be controlling in regard to the power of the executive branch to deal—even at the cost of hardship to lawful residents—with aliens who are by their own admissions deportable.

manent residence; here, by contrast, there is discrimination among groups of individuals, all of whom are aliens. The policy differentiates among aliens, but does not discriminate against them. Congress' power to decide which aliens shall enter or remain in the country, individually and as groups, is undisputed and has been reaffirmed recently by this Court. Kleindienst v. Mandel, 408 U.S. 753. Petitioners, far from being lawfully admitted permanent residents, are by their own concessions deportable; they can hardly complain that Congress has used alienage as a category in carrying out its powers under Article I, Section 8, clause 4 of the Constitution to establish rules for the admission and exclusion of aliens to this country.[5]

Nor are petitioners correct in arguing (Pet. 10) that the INS has burdened the "fundamental right" of marriage. Neither INS nor Congress has imposed burdens upon marriage. The government has said no more than that aliens unlawfully within the country—whether married or not—are subject to deportation. Congress and the INS have declined to allow marriage to produce a benefit unavailable to unmarried aliens unlawfully within the country. The Constitution does not demand that marriage be the source of preferential treatment.[6] [5]Petitioners refer (Pet. 7) to H.R. 981, 93d Cong., 1st Sess. (1973), which would have granted preferences in the award of immigrant visas to immediate family members of both citizens and lawful resident aliens, and would thus eliminate the long wait for immigrant visas by Western Hemisphere aliens. No corresponding bill was introduced in the Senate in the 93d Congress, nor has any been introduced in the Senate in the 94th Congress.

[6]Indeed, marriage is a source of preferential treatment for petitioners because Western Hemisphere aliens married to permanent resident aliens are exempt from the labor certification requirements. Petitioners' complaint is that Congress and the INS did not provide the additional benefit of preference within the quota (or even exemption from the quota).

3. Petitioners contend that the INS policy is invalid because it was announced without use of the notice and comment rulemaking provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. 553. Even if Section 553 is applicable to INS,[7] Section 701(a)(2) of the Act exempts from judicial review agency action that is committed to agency discretion by law. Here, 8 U.S.C. 1254(e) explicitly commits to the discretion of the Attorney General the authority to grant voluntary departure. While, as the court of appeals noted (Pet. App. 13a-14a), the district courts have jurisdiction to review exercises of INS discretion to determine whether they are arbitrary or capricious, the basis of that jurisdiction is contained in the Immigration Act (8 U.S.C. 1329), not in the Administrative Procedure Act.

At all events, Section 553(b)(3)(A) of the Administrative Procedure Act exempts "general statements of policy" from the notice requirements of Section 553. Both lower courts correctly held that the July 31, 1972, policy and the April 10, 1973, modification are within the statutory exception for general policy statements. The court of appeals reasoned (Pet. App. 15a):

> In the first place, the regulation governing the issue of extensions of time to depart which is here relevant explicitly provides that the "[a]uthority to extend the time within which to depart . . . is within the sole jurisdiction of the district director." 8 C.F.R. §244.2. The "instructions" complained of in this case do not purport to amend the published regulation or [7]Section 553 does not apply "to the extent that there is involved * * * a military or foreign affairs function of the United States" (5 U.S.C. 553(a)(1)). As this Court has repeatedly observed, federal "[p]olicies pertaining to the entry of aliens and their right to remain here are peculiarly concerned with the practical conduct of government" (Galvan v. Press, supra, 347 U.S. at 531), for such policies are "vitally and intricately interwoven with contemporaneous policies in regard to the conduct of foreign relations, the war power, and the maintenance of a republican form of government" (Harisiades v. Shaughnessy, supra, 342 U.S. at 588-589).

> to oust the District Director of his "sole" discretion. In fact, the District Director of New York was the only INS officer who "routinely" extended the stay in the case of an alien married to a resident alien; the practice in the rest of the country was otherwise. We construe the instruction to be simply a statement by the agency of its general policy as a guideline for the District Directors. * * * One scholar has suggested that "[i]t may be that 'general statements of policy' are rules directed primarily at the staff of an agency describing how it will conduct agency discretionary functions, while other rules are directed primarily at the public in an effort to impose obligations on them." Bonfield, Some Tentative Thoughts on Public Participation in the Making of Interpretative Rules and General Statements of Policy under the APA, 23 Admin. L. Rev. 101, 115 (1970-71).

Finally, as both courts below found, the change in policy affected no "existing rights and obligations" of petitioners and therefore was not open to challenge by them. Lewis-Mota v. Secretary of Labor, 469 F.2d 478, 482 (C.A. 2); Texaco, Inc. v. Federal Power Commission, 412 F.2d 740, 744 (C.A. 3). Petitioners' claim that they had "pre-existing expectations which were extinguished by administrative fiat" (Pet. 16) rings hollow in light of the fact that they were not married at the time either of the policy change or of its subsequent limited relaxation.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, it is respectfully submitted that the petition for a writ of certiorari should be denied.

APPENDIX

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20515

June 27, 1972

Honorable Raymond F. Farrell, Commissioner
Immigration and Naturalization Service
Department of Justice
119 D Street, N.E.
Washington, D.C. 20536

Dear Mr. Commissioner:

Hearings conducted by this Subcommittee over the past year in the field of immigration law enforcement have pointed up the unfavorable influence which employment by illegal aliens is having on the domestic job market. This is, of course, particularly evident in those areas of the United States having a high rate of unemployment among Americans.

With this in mind, the Subcommittee believes that the Service practice of routinely permitting alien professionals and certain natives of the Western Hemisphere to remain in the United States until their visa priority dates are reached is no longer justifiable. These non-resident aliens and their dependents are competing for jobs when unemployed residents of the United States, and their numbers should not be allowed to increase further. The Subcommittee therefore recommends that this practice be terminated immediately, but that those aliens who have already been granted permission to remain pending visa availability be allowed to stay if they maintain the qualifications on which the privilege was given originally.

The Subcommittee is of the opinion that existing provisions of the Immigration and Nationality Act, particularly section 101(a)(15)(H)(i), are sufficient to provide for the admission of professionals to the United States to fill those positions which cannot be filled by United States residents.

Kindest regards.

Sincerely,

Peter W. Rodino, Jr.
Chairman
